ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

To commemorate the 30th anniversary of the original publication of Bad Blood: The Tuskegee Syphilis Experiment, the Wake Forest University Center for Bioethics, Health & Society presents a major conference to promote reflection and discussion about critical issues of ongoing importance in research ethics.

With the help of a distinguished group of bioethics thinkers, conferees will consider: the relationship between researchers and study participants; the significance of race, ethnicity, and socioeconomic status in perceptions about research, the meaning of research results, and the research policy agenda; the changing relationships between research, treatment, and biotechnology around the globe; and the role of Institutional Review Boards (IRBs) in protecting the rights, interests, and safety of research participants and promoting sound and ethical science.

Sponsored by the Center for Bioethics, Health & Society, Wake Forest University

*Additional Support from: Humanities Institute;
Institute for Public Engagement
Wake Forest University*

*Maya Angelou Center for Health Equity;
Office of Research;
Department of Social Sciences & Health Policy
Wake Forest School of Medicine*

*Translational Science Institute;
Department of Chaplaincy & Pastoral Education
Wake Forest Baptist Medical Center*

The conference is free and open to the public. However, space is limited and registration is required.
